THE PENDULUM SWINGS

If there is one thing that my Council colleagues and I agree on (and there are many more than one!) it is the need to adopt policies and take actions to increase the residential population of the city. Adelaide has had a chequered history of changing population numbers and a cursory look at our history will show how the pendulum has swung over the years!

Adelaide had the benefit of being a fully planned city. Colonel Light's plan of 1837 determined the form and structure of the city before any houses were built and before anyone actually took up residence. His intentions were that Victoria Square would be the commercial hub of the city with residential 'villages' built around the other squares and with a residential 'dormitory' in North Adelaide. But because commercial activity, driven by the free market, chose to establish close to a water source, Rundle and Hindley Streets became, and have remained, the commercial focus of the city and the residential areas developed at North Adelaide and in a more haphazard way across the southern parts of the city.

By 1880 when City Engineer Charles Smith produced his survey of the city, it was almost fully developed and the suburban sprawl beyond the Park Lands had begun. The population of Adelaide in 1880 was probably around 25,000 and it peaked at 43,000 in 1915. In the post WW2 years the population declined to a low of 7400 in 1972 mainly due to Council By-Laws which positively discouraged living in the city. However, in 1977 the first comprehensive City of Adelaide Plan came into operation with an emphasis on the city as a place to live which led to the steady re-population of the city to its current figure of 20,689 and a target of around 40,000 by 2031.

The challenge now is to not only achieve that numbers but to ensure that we have a range of different housing options that will ensure a strong social mix of residents from all walks of life and from all socio-economic groups.

Over the decades, as the population fluctuated, the city has been home to rich and poor, vulnerable and secure, permanent and transient, artisan and professional. But as we now strive to increase our population and retain a good social mix, one of the problems is the lack of affordable housing to rent or buy. We have housing for vulnerable people and an abundant supply of top-end houses and apartments and gentrified cottages but very little is available in the mid-range, what the industry calls 'affordable housing'. This is an important element of housing which will provide homes for the many nurses, hospitality workers, shop assistants and students who work and should be able to afford to live in the city.

WHAT IS AFFORDABLE HOUSING ?

Council defines affordable housing as housing that is provided to eligible lower income households at 75 per cent of market rent, with the goal that such households do not pay more than 30 per cent of their gross income in rent or loan repayments. In Adelaide it takes more than 7.4 times the average annual income to buy an average Adelaide house the cost of which is an increase from 3.6 times in 2001, according to a report by the housing action group, Australians for Affordable Housing (AAH) which is made up of 60 community and housing groups.

A strong and diverse population base is good for the city and for its residents, from a number of points of view:

- It brings more business and general prosperity to the city commercial activities which benefits the whole state.
- It activates the city streets and public realm resulting in better amenities and a safer, more pleasant environment.
- Living in the city cuts down on travel time and costs and offers a fulfilling lifestyle right on your doorstep.
- The 30 Year Plan for Adelaide recognises the importance of a strong capital city as a focus for the whole State.
- And what better than always being at home to our Heritage, Park Lands and cultural/entertainment opportunities?

Over recent years Council has been involved in housing developments aimed at using Council resources to leverage government and private sector schemes particularly to facilitate lower-cost housing. Recent schemes have included Sydney Place, Common Ground housing at the bus depot in Franklin Street, Whitmore Square (where sustainability was another objective), Balfours Site which provides for 15% component of affordable housing and currently we are developing a 200+ unit development at Sturt St which will use Federal funding (NRAS) to provide a large number of affordable units.

Whilst the provision of housing is not a primary responsibility of Local Government, there are many ways in which Councils can work with mainline providers to strive for a strong and diverse range of housing options in the city.

"Every time you put up a building not worth caring about, you contribute to a city not worth caring about and a country not worth caring about." ~James Howard Kunstler
